I'm not sure what the motivation is for eliminating the Commission of Animal Control and Welfare. There is no cost for this, as the commissioners do not receive any compensation. Yet, over the years, they have provided an essential public forum and compassionate, forward-thinking discussions and presentations, which led to a number of recommendations, most of which I wholeheartedly supported, such as relocating elephants from the San Francisco Zoo to a sanctuary, banning of cat declawing, and ending pet store sales of dogs and cats from breeding mills. I live in Mission Bay and as a person who loves animals, I was always proud to see such a body in my city's government. Please don't eliminate this lifeline for animals in our city, especially that there is no cost for this.
