Hello,

I was alarmed to hear that San Francisco is considering the dissolution of the SF Commission on Animal Welfare and Control. The commission costs the city nothing, since all of its members are volunteers, which makes this move particularly puzzling.

I have been proud to live in a city that has a group dedicated to the wellbeing of animals. San Francisco residents are proud of how we have stepped up in defense of our most vulnerable neighbors when they need us most. There's no one more vulnerable than animals so let's not be the city that got rid of the group dedicated to their care and protection for no reason.

Thank you,
Ian (Mission District resident)
