5. New Business

A. Welcoming New Councilmembers [Discussion Item]

Chair Torres welcomed Councilmembers Risa Beckwith, Mark Ryle, and Rebecca Schwartz and invited each to introduce themselves and identify issues of interest.

Councilmember Schwartz described 11 years of volunteer work with San Francisco Animal Care and Control, including work with shelter dogs and accompanying animal control officers on field responses. Her interests include pet licensing, spay/neuter, and rodenticides and glue traps.

Councilmember Beckwith described her background in health psychology and public health and her current studies in animal welfare, ethics, and law. She discussed the "One Health/One Welfare" approach, research concerning veterinary professionals' mental health and veterinary care shortages, and her interest in disaster preparedness that accounts for companion animals. She also described her participation in a UC Davis emergency response team and interest in evidence-based policy.

Councilmember Ryle described his work with San Francisco's Head Start program and his family's longtime involvement with local animal shelters and rescue organizations. He identified shelter overcrowding and the mental health of veterinary professionals as areas of interest.

Chair Torres welcomed these areas of interest, particularly the opportunity to examine pet licensing administration and the use of licensing revenue, revisit animal-related disaster preparedness presentations, and continue examining shelter overcrowding and spay/neuter policy.

During Council discussion, a question was raised about the status of proposed giant pandas at the San Francisco Zoo. Chair Torres summarized previous Council consideration of concerns, including the Council's 2024 support for recommendations by animal welfare advisors to the Joint Zoo Committee. He noted the Zoo's lack of a clear timeline and discussed possible future presentations from Panda Voices and San Francisco Zoo representatives. He indicated that the panda issue could return to the agenda in the new year.

Public Comment

A community member requested that councilmembers use their microphones so attendees and remote viewers could hear. Councilmember Ryle briefly repeated his introduction in response to the microphone concern.

A community member welcomed the new members' interests and encouraged the Council to develop partnerships and practical paths for turning recommendations into policy.
