The project involves scanning 1,400 boxes containing over 2 million documents and images. Reenvisioning DPA Reports, Over the next few months, DPA will reexamine all reports to improve how they communicate information to the commission, San Francisco leadership, and the public. Aim is to leverage available technology to report the work more comprehensively and efficiently while focusing on data points important to the stakeholders. Civilian oversight leaders from around the country attended this. The conference addressed timely topics including artificial intelligence (AI) in law enforcement practices, using AI to enhance oversight, potential AI bias and concerns, establishing safeguards and policies for responsible AI use, immigration and law enforcement actions at state and federal levels, RIPA data and audit implications, and issues related to diminished support for civilian oversight. Commission Vice President Kevin Benedicto shared his technology and policymaking expertise on a panel about creating AI policies for police practices.
